Meet Bro. Ron C. Osborne-Williams. Bro. Osborne-Williams currently completed his doctoral research in Marriage and family therapy. His experiences of constructing an experiential strength-based approach to engage men as fathers and implementation in the reconstruction of the fatherhood mentorship program at Nova Southeastern University. As a mentor, educator, and therapist, Bro. Osborne-Williams is passionate about experiences that allow him to help and empower individuals, couples, and families to strengthen and heal their relationships. He helps with getting themselves and others to understand how contextual factors such as race, class, gender, age, nationality, religion, and sexual orientation impact the mental, emotional, relational, spiritual, and social well-being of underserved groups in our society. He hosts Therapy Thursdays, giving viewers a therapeutic perspective on fatherhood on Sistahs4Sisters' weekly Facebook Live Show. Also, the weekly participation as a panelist on the GO PRO Radio Network, Facebook & YouTube shows Revolutionary Party and Colored Only Cafe. This opportunity allows him to share his therapeutic expertise and provide information.

Currently, an Adjunct Professor at the Social and Behavioral Sciences Department, Central Campus at Broward College, and as a Provisional Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist with years of providing education in at-risk communities, professional pieces of training on Power and Control related topics, and empowering fathers to actively engage in the lives of their children by their participation in weekly "Fatherhood Talks" group sessions live on YouTube and fathers only Zoom meetings to evaluate their parenting skills and fathering role.

Bro. Ron also studied Human Sexuality at Widener University; he utilizes an experiential strength-based approach to coaching/counseling (play therapy, group, individual, couples, and family).

One of his most valuable experiences was serving four years as a Special Education Volunteer for the United States Peace Corps. He was responsible for building special education programs for children in need for St. Lucia's Ministry of Education in the West Indies. Before that, he earned a bachelor's degree in Psychology and Specific Learning Disabilities at Bethune-Cookman University, a master's degree in Education (Inclusive School Practices) at Temple University, and a master's degree in Family Therapy (MFT) at Nova Southeastern University.
